Registration: Visit: https://mctft.geniussis.com/Registration.aspx Once there, find your specific course, click add, then go to the top of the page and click register. You will receive a confirmation email later. Browsers other than Internet Explorer are best. There are two course times offered on the same day, for a total of two available course slots, choose the one that best suits your schedule. Use only official names and official agency email addresses.

Equipment requirements (provided by each student): Note taking material or device. And optionally you may consider having your agency-specific SOPs and or planning tools on-hand.

Description: This course teaches students how to plan their missions at a tactical level. Instructors will lead you though learning objectives, scenarios and also challenge you to create a complete plan based on current LEO operations and relevant operational environments. The U.S. military is conducting missions around the world and are often called upon to help execute massive recovery efforts (like during the 2017 hurricane season). What are the planning considerations for a mission? How are they used to construct an operation? This course will provide in-depth answers to these questions as well as ones relevant to your agency. A 4-hour course certificate will be awarded upon successful completion.

Objectives:

Importance of filing – Understand the importance of a mission folder, minimum agency requirements and how to accommodate and plan out safety considerations.

Operational leading procedures – From receiving the mission to conducting reconnaissance and plan refinement you will discover and learn the importance of the 8 steps of the OLP.

Standardized briefing format – Accountability, task organization and even weather are all critical to, and can effect mission success. Students will learn to develop the appropriate briefing for a unit to execute a mission.
